Lessons from the School of Life

1. If someone disrespects you, they are disrespecting themselves. Your respect comes from your community, not from individuals.
2. If someone insults you, they are insulting themselves. Insulting others is a bad thing to do, and it often stems from their own hypocrisy.
3. If someone is disloyal to you, nobody will believe them. They will be disloyal to others as well.
4. When someone criticizes you, it shows their own insecurities. They might feel bad about themselves and want to bring others down.
5. If someone lies to you, it reflects their character. Honesty is important, and their lies reveal their lack of integrity.
6. When someone judges you, it shows their own fears. They may be afraid of what's different or unknown to them.
7. If someone betrays your trust, they lose your trust forever. Trust is hard to rebuild, and their actions speak louder than words.
8. When someone is rude, it's a sign of their own struggles. They may be dealing with their own problems and take it out on others.
9. If someone ignores you, they miss out on a chance to connect. Relationships are valuable, and their loss is not yours.
10. When someone is jealous, it shows they feel inadequate. Instead of celebrating others, they focus on what they lack.
11. If someone gossips about you, it reveals their own insecurities. They may feel the need to talk about others to feel better about themselves.
12. When someone is hypocritical, it shows their inability to live by their own standards. Their actions often contradict their words, revealing a lack of self-awareness and a hunger for power.

These lessons remind us that how others act often reflects their own issues, not our worth.
