A summer break reflection on my LinkedIn posts

The main purposes behind my LinkedIn posts are threefold:

1. To promote our University, Abu Dhabi University (ADU), and highlight its achievements and they are so many. I wholeheartedly want to support the University's Chairman Ali Bin Harmal Aldhaheri, Ph.D. who is passionate about our University and has a clear vision and work tirelessly to make ADU one of the best universities in the region and beyond. Our two visions meet for the purpose of achieving this goal. I am learning on a daily basis from an inspirational and energetic leader.

My motivation comes from my passion for ADU and its future (and our sister college Liwa College as well). I write these posts in my free time, often in the evenings and on weekends and during University breaks (this has taken hundreds of hours and this is not different from writing research papers as we do that usually in our spare time). I have made posting a routine of my daily life. While I didn't seek the recognition, I am proud to have become one of the top Arab creators on LinkedIn, which is very rewarding for me.

2. To share my humble knowledge and expertise with a wider audience on the excellent LinkedIn platform, which has over 1 billion users. I believe knowledge should be freely shared and not seen as a unique selling point. Academia is the right place to share knowledge and expertise.

I created a personal page to make my expertise publicly accessible.

In addition, my Google Scholar profile will give you access to the titles of my publications.

3. To be part of a network of like minded people who are passionate about knowledge creation and sharing, particularly within the education sector. I have learned a lot from our colleagues' contributions and have established many academic partnerships through LinkedIn connections.

In summary, my LinkedIn posts serve to promote my University and its achievements, as well as to share my own knowledge and insights with the large professional network on LinkedIn, in addition to being part of a network of like minded people which I see as important regardless of any personal recognition.
