The participants included a remarkable lineup of leaders in higher education:

- Professor Daniel McCluskey CEng of the School of Physics, Engineering & Computer Science, University of Hertfordshire
- Professor David Manley - Dean of Science and Engineering, University of Bristol
- Professor Fatima Annan-Diab - Executive Dean, Royal Docks School of Business and Law, University of East London

During our visit, I had the opportunity to present some of ADU's success stories, followed by a dynamic roundtable discussion. We explored critical topics such as the future of the higher education sector, change management, the integration of artificial intelligence, the significance of effective marketing, and the role of social media in education. The discussions were not only insightful but also fostered a collaborative spirit, allowing us to share and exchange ideas on how we can collectively shape the future of education.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to my esteemed colleagues, Steve DCunha, Khulud Abdallah, and colleagues in Marketing and IT, for their invaluable assistance with the presentation and logistics. Additionally, I am grateful to Advance HE for providing us with this opportunity to engage with the TMP 54 delegates.

I personally attended TMP 14 back in 2006 while working in the UK, and I can attest to the program's prestige and its significant impact on leadership development in higher education. Advance HE is renowned for facilitating transformative learning experiences that empower leaders to navigate the complexities of the educational landscape effectively. ADU has 103, fellows, senior fellows, and principal fellows of Advance HE.
